Artistic collaboration for downtown

We like what the Greenfield Recreation Department is trying to do by making connections between some local artists and public school students with the aim of creating downtown public art. As explained by Recreation Director Christie Moore, the idea is to have two artists work with a bunch of students, no more than 50 each, two hours a day during two upcoming vacations, which will lead to an artistic creation and its installation. It's an opportunity for both artists and the assembled students to leave an impression on each other as well as with the public. We can't wait to see what develops.
