About the Energy Park

Opened in 1999, this park is a 1-1/4 acre green space, reclaimed from an abandoned railroad station site. It was built as a partnership project between the Town of Greenfield and Northeast Sustainable Energy Assoc (NESEA). Much of the Park was built on "sweat equity" with thousands of volunteer hours, materials, and plants, which still continues to this day.

Among the several top features are public art, educational exhibits, and a 1944 Caboose Museum. The public gardens are beautiful and contain identification tiles and map for visitors. The arboretum features 25 varieties of native trees and shrubs.

A bandstand is located inside the park and is used for Seasonal Sunday Concert Series, Coop Concerts, and Military Band Concerts. The structure was built to mimic the general shape and design of the former train station and be architecturally sensitive to the location and context of the park.
